

The Effective Educator

written by the Teachers.net educators, 2009

The effective educator is one who believes that a child can do wonderful and marvelous things and will always be able to astound and amaze if given the opportunity.

Effective educators will not limit students' creativity and will take the time to build caring relationships with their students.

The effective educator is not afraid to break it down when a task is difficult, but will always notice when a job is well done.

Building relationships and having high expectations is the key.

Effective educators show students they care and create the desire to learn by constantly providing success-building opportunities.

In doing this, effective educators develop outstanding students that will follow them everywhere that success can lead.

The effective educator is sincere in this pursuit and wholeheartedly desires success for every child.
